

Alzheimer's Support Group

An Alzheimer's Association support group is an open gathering of people with common problems, needs and interests. They come together to share their feelings, thoughts, and experiences, in a combined effort to better cope with and manage the shared problems of dementia, in a safe environment. The goal of the Alzheimer's Association support group is to provide emotional, social and/or educational support to group members.